Fr. Giussani, the Italian priest who founded the international Catholic movement of Communion and Liberation, has been known to be an educator, able to communicate the faith in a persuasive way to many young people through an original pedagogical approach and method. Can his educational proposal work outside of the Italian system and at a different time, marked by a heavily ideological context? If so, why and how? Speakers are teachers who are familiar with Fr. Giussani's pedagogy and will address these questions through their first-hand experience with high school and college students.
